Aquapella: Happy Hour

by Alex Yelland and Erin McCullough

Award-winning Aquapella return to the Fringe with another sensational collection of songs

After competing in the national final at this year's university ICCA competition, and winning awards for Outstanding Soloists, and winning the semi-final, Aquapella, the University of Bath's a cappella group, cannot wait to bring its fresh and exciting performance back to the Fringe. Widely known and loved in their own city, they are looking forward to bringing everything they have to offer to Edinburgh, with a repertoire including upbeat pieces, moving pieces, comedic pieces, and everything in-between.

Under the leadership of their joint musical directors, all music performed by the group is arranged by its own members – this is just one of the ways in which they ensure true uniqueness and character. Their songs aim to capture the attention of all audience members, regardless of age or musical taste, including covers of a huge number of artists; from the 1975 to John Legend, and Justin Timberlake to Prince.

Aquapella is a group that prides itself on stage chemistry: it is their belief that there is strength in both cohesion and numbers, and this is what makes their larger than average group one of the most enjoyable and unique to watch. They arrange music together, they rehearse together, some of them even live together, and they pride themselves on the incredible relationship they share as a group.

The group performs at a large number of concerts and events throughout the year, both within the university calendar, including singing at the University of Bath Summer Ball, and outside of it at private functions and busking, and works towards its Fringe show throughout the year. Aquapella has had its most exciting year yet, including competition success and the release of their debut music video, and they cannot wait to share everything they have to offer with audiences at the Fringe.
